SEC. DEB HAALAND – FIRST NATIVE AMERICAN IN THE CABINET

Sec. Deb Haaland is the first Native American to serve in the President's cabinet and has been instrumental in bringing attention and action to the horrific incident rate of violence against Indigenous women.

HINMUUTTU-YALATLAT AND THE BANISHMENT OF THE NEZ PERCE TRIBE

When Hinmuuttu-Yalatlat (commonly referred to in American History as "Chief Joseph") was born to the Wallowa band of Nez Perce Native American Tribe, his people roamed a territory consisting of large swaths of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. By the time he died, the vast Nez Perce tribe had been forcibly concentrated to a land less than a tenth of their home territory and his Wallowa band had been banished from Nez Perce territory entirely – a galling consequence of promises reneged, treaties of bad faith, and violence by and on behalf of the US government.

DIVIDING GERTRUDE FROM ZITKÁLA-ŠÁ

This article brings awareness to Native American activism surrounding boarding school assimilation programs imposed on Native Americans in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Zitkála-Šá was one of those responsible for documenting these institutions and their practices, and for advocating for Native American people from an alternate perspective.
